Planting and Care of Gladioli Bulbs

Each gladiolus bulb will give full measure of profit or pleasure to you with less trouble than almost anything you can plant. For early flowering plant as soon as the ground is ready for early garden making and danger of freezing is past. For succession of flowers continue to plant at two week intervals until late in June.

Ground will be in better shape if well covered with manure late in the fall preceding planting time. At planting time, which is always in the spring, use well rotted manure and avoid getting the bulb in close contact with the manure. If soil is heavy it should be plowed or spaded deep and well pulverized and packed, but avoid working it when it is too wet.

Tender young sprouts may need a little help in getting through the ground if a crust forms after planting, but be careful that you do not break them. Cultivate often so as to keep the soil loose. When flower spikes begin to show do not cultivate more than two inches deep.

When you cut flower spikes leave four or five leaves on the plant if you want full sized bulbs to form for the next year. In hot weather spikes should be cut in the morning just as the first flowers open on the spike you are cutting and left to bloom in the house.

Dig bulbs in the fall before they are too ripe, dry them in air and sunshine. Then store them in a cool dry cellar. Keep temperature as near forty degrees as possible.
